

THE ART OF FRIENDSHIP

Stemming from a tight-knit friendship, Lincoln Park Design utilizes close relationships and collaboration to craft inventive interiors for even its most discerning clients

Brook Bradbury and Jennifer Walker have been friends since the moment Bradbury moved in next door. Today, their friendship has blossomed into a beautiful partnership—as co founders of Lincoln Park Design, the duo brings eclectic, boundary-defying designs to the East Bay.

“Our friendship allows us to look at a project, the client, and the home’s atmosphere to come up with a bold design,” says Walker.

The firm’s dedication to fostering strong relationships extends into its client base. Bradbury and Walker visit construction sites constantly, building trust and even taking on manual labor themselves—a feat that has been rewarded with multiple Thanksgiving dinner invites from previous clients. Clients rely on that trust to embark on new twists to classic designs.

“We try to delve into a homeowner’s personality and get them to do something that makes their design unique,” says Bradbury, “whether that’s color, texture, or a specific detail that makes everything pop.”

And, if a client is on the fence about a particularly unconventional design choice, the team will create a 3D rendering that shows exactly how the concept would appear in the home. With designs that are both elegant and whimsical, clients are bound to bask in the splendor of their new space.

“Our clients trust us because, ultimately, we’re not just saying, ‘Here’s your design,’ and leaving. Instead, we are listening to their wants and needs and then providing our expertise or ideas with their desires in mind,” says Walker. “It’s important that the relationship has good synergy. That’s how you create exceptional designs.”

Not afraid of color, the Lincoln Park Design team has infused this kitchen with hues of blue and a colorful island countertop. The burnt-orange bedspread ties into the birds of paradise and macaw depictions on the wall of this bedroom. This luxurious bathroom is the perfect example of Walker and Bradbury’s ability to bring color and texture into a traditional setting. Brook Bradbury and Jennifer Walker.
